NEW YORK — Giorgio Armani has filed a suit against rival Salvatore Ferragamo. The suit alleges that it's not fair that the Italian luxury fashion house is getting special credit and financing for using the name "Armani" when in fact, it's a famous name in the fashion world, according to reports from Reuters and AFP. Read more: Salvatore Ferragamo Launches Its First Garment Factory in France Ferragamo, founded in 1871, is known for its leather bags and footwear. The lawsuit, filed in the U.S. District Court of the Southern District of New York, says the fact that Armani "is a world-renowned designer, while [Ferragamo] is a well-known domestic brand is entirely irrelevant." "Ferragamo's use of the well-known name 'Armani' for its 'Armani' products is likely to confuse consumers," the suit says. "It also places Armani in an unfair competitive position and creates the impression that Armani was a brand associated exclusively with the Ferragamo family." In a statement to Business Insider, a spokesperson for Armani said, "It is obvious that both companies want to be associated with the same designer Giorgio Armani and we

TitleBarTime With Full Keygen

TitleBarTime creates a small bar on the desktop and shows the current time as well as for how long your computer has been running. It also provides access to an elementary notepad for taking notes. This is a simple application designed for all types of users looking for ways to personalize their operating system. View a title bar with the current time and system uptime Following a brief setup operation, TitleBarTime launches a transparent bar on the upper part of the screen, which stays on top of other windows. This option cannot be disabled. Customize the bar's font color and other aspects Moreover, the tool gets automatically integrated into the Windows startup sequence after installation, which means that it runs every time you boot your PC to display the current clock and system uptime. However, this can be deactivated from the options panel. When it comes to other settings, you can change the font color (white, black, red, blue), hide the current time or system uptime, hide the current date, and show a solid background background instead of a transparent one. Launch a simple text editor to write notes To gain access to the text editor, simply click the notepad icon on the right side of TitleBarTime. You can write messages in a sticky note with a yellow background as well as save changes. There is no exporting option available, however. By the look of the interface with the unpolished graphical elements, it's obvious that TitleBarTime hasn't received updates for a long time. Even so, we didn't have any trouble getting it up and running on the newest Windows edition, without having to use the compatibility troubleshooter. Outdated app with few features Unfortunately, TitleBarTime doesn't give you the possibility to display more information in the bar, such as disk space or CPU and RAM usage. Nevertheless, you can test it for yourself. Find any software on Software.com

In some places we use generators to return promises from asynchronous actions. For example, in one file we have this. async function openLink (url) { return http.get(url).then(res => { return res.text() }) } // file 1 async function callApi () { let link = await openLink('url') //... use link here } My question is what's the proper way to convert file 1 to something like: async function openLink (url) { return await new Promise((resolve, reject) => { http.get(url).then(res => {
