“With FIFA 22, our goal is to deliver a simulation which captures the unique movement of the real players,” said Sean O’Driscoll, FIFA technical director. “A second layer is then added to create a more detailed and realistic experience, enabling more authentic behaviours and more realistic contact.” To identify players and a number of scenarios such as corner kicks, free-kicks and team-mates being in possession of the ball, the motion capture data is used to layer deeper visual effects and physicality in every possible facet of the game. New player attributes have been developed to simulate movement, such as ball trajectory, a player’s ability to press and the amount of space a player is able to cover. “FIFA 22 allows for accurate player animations through motion capture data and allows for more fluid and balanced gameplay,” said Austin Rowland, senior producer on FIFA. “Overall, we’re excited to introduce an even more enhanced FIFA experience to a new generation of fans and existing fanbases.” “In order to achieve a realistic experience across all areas of the game, motion capture was essential to deliver all the new player attributes,” said Ben Haumont, FIFA Lead Developer at EA Canada. "We're very excited to announce that FIFA 22 is in development. This is EA's largest visual development project to date and it's an exciting project for us and our fans. With FIFA 21, we've raised the bar in terms of delivering an authentic football experience by incorporating new animation and physics technology," said Thomas Kristensen, SVP of Marketing, EA Labels. "The result is an enhanced experience for players, with more fluid and realistic gameplay and more realistic face-to-face interactions." a gang member" and was sentenced to life in prison.
